

And the winner is...

Contributed by Jan Lundberg
29 June 2011

Charles Komanoff!

Charles is an economist working in New York City on transportation and energy.

- We interrupt this announcement to advise you that Culture Change is still short on funds for operating in July. Please help now! -

Charles is known for research showing nuclear power to be financially unfeasible. I know first hand that he has put many years into promoting car-free living, bike advocacy, and trying to make cars pay their way in society.

He won the contest held this week: Who will be the first to send a donation to Culture Change via the mails to our new address in Santa Cruz? Second question was for the winner: could we disclose the name and city, or was the donation to be "from Anonymous"?

Part of the attraction for contestants was that the winner was invited to make a statement on culture change, and provide a web link. Not only is this information below from Charles; we asked him if the amount of the donation could be made known. He said yes: $100. Culture Change thanks him for his timely generosity for our July expenses. This is Charles' statement:

For tenacity and courage; for love of Earth; and for providing a bracing antidote to conventional environmentalism's crackpot realism, Jan and Culture Change deserve so much more than my modest contribution. Let's get ten thousand of us to do the same!

Web site:
Komanoff.net

Thanks again Charlie!

In solidarity,